After a battle lasting many ages,
The Devil won,
And he said to God
(who had been his Maker):
"Lord,
We are about to witness the unmaking of Creation
By my hand.
I would not wish you
to think me cruel,
so I beg you; take three things
from this world before I destroy it.
Three things, and then the rest will be wiped away."
God thought for a little time.
And at last He said:
"No, there is nothing."
The Devil was surprised.
"Not even you, Lord?" he said.
And God said:
"No. Not even me."

Moon

Witch, do this for me:
Find me a moon
Made of longing.
Then cut it silver thin,
And having cut it,
Hang it high
Above my beloved’s house
So that she may look up
Tonight
And see it,
And seeing it, sigh for me
As I sigh for her,
Moon or no moon.

-Christopher Carrion

Two of my favorite poem/writing parts of Abarat. Clive Barker is the BEST!
